The start, to many, was the centre of attraction, whilst along the course the company lined the way in thick masses. As might be supposed, Lovity, with the advantage in weight and the experienced jocksyship of her owner, was first oft, but the activity of Mr. Jackson in getting off surprised all who witnessed the start. Fordham tried several times in the early jar of the contest to confuse his answer opponent in the pigskin, until descending the Bashes hill, where Nephunus—the once-famed Derby favourite—was suddenly abroad, and his owner, having lost his cap, the pair appeared in difficulties. Finding his horse, who, by the way, has been unsound since the Derby, had broken down, Mr. Jackson, whose horenarship, was pulled him up, and was beaten by twenty lengths. On dismounting each of the riders was voicifrously chered. The remainder of the day's racing, which is fully described below, needs no further comment, except it be necessary to unterly contractic the rumour that there was a dispute about Fort, the winner of the last race. FANCT.—The taste for pugilism extended itself so generally of late years that every one now felt its influence, so no more noise need be particularised as its patrons. This was the era of Boximania. Men of letters, too, now first bent their attention towards rendering indeed a science. Duelling, superseeded by its practice, was entinguished among the higher circles; and about twenty professors of the art taught, at home and abroad, its application to the niceties of "self-defence." In 1811 a Gazette, wholly devoted to "The Fancy," was first published. Jan. 27. Purcell b M'Carthy (I.), 133min., 125 ro., XXgs (a claretty mill)

Spirited fighting to a close, when Fox again down and as-Preeman up this on a lark, and all amiles, a pleasing contrast to Fox, who, not belying his name, looked as demure as that animal when about to ensure "Goosey," and his tactics were those of a very cautions general. On setting to close quarters Freeman, wanting to be at work, at once made play with his left on the temple, beeping excellent grand with his right; indeed, of the bystanders, who were (with little response) clanorous with their offers of 2 to 1 on him. The lads fought to a close, both pounding away heavily, till Fox went down amidst sundry uprears.

Hound 4-A heightened the above and the chances certainly looked at it his favour. Fox, however, was not to be denied, as he got terrifically on the risk with his right, almost simulaneously loosening his left, which found it is home on the left ear, which at once showed signs of the visitation; Freeman, clevely to avoid, seed, and some rapid ribbing onseed, when Fox got down again went down.

Mosday.—There was a pretty large attendance at the corrier, and settling upon the Cambridgeshire and the events of the past Houghton occupied much time, most witskunding the daily reckoning at Newmarket and the preliminary means a probably a drawn battle with the bookmakers, for on the whole it has been pronounced "harmless." Lord Chesterfold, from not being what is termed a "bettor," did not land more than $2,000 above the value of the saline; the smoke freed of his lordship is said to have wen $2,000, and saline; the smoke freed of his lordship is said to have wen $2,000, and saline; the smoke freed of his lordship is said to have wen $2,000, and saline; the saline which we have been made to suffer considerably, as, according to the mare straid on the previous Saturday, it was good enough to have atood for a "raker." Had Aurelian, Limosian, or Myrite pulled through—either of the first two for a great deal of money. Taken altogether, the settling was satisfactory, and it is a good onem for the onessing season, that matters should have gone off so smoothly over the last great gathering of the year. The betting which took place during the afternoon was not of an actionsive nature, and the only interesting quotations will be found fully decided below.
